

Last year in Canon City a ten year operation to thin the forests around the Wet Mountain peaks began. The operation is backed by a coalition that includes the Forest Service, private companies, and individuals.

- Deleted: 's
- Deleted: had begun
- Deleted: being
- Deleted: the Forest Service. A
- Deleted: including

The coalition is working from a "use 'em or lose 'em" policy of cutting trees before burning them. Forest management, including heavy logging and elaborate fire suppression, has allowed Southwestern Ponderosa forests to become overgrown and fire-

- Formatted: Indent: First line: 0.5"
- Deleted: partnership
- Deleted: with
- Deleted: US f

prone. These overgrown, fire-prone forests scarred the Canon City community in 2002 when a large fire burned a lot of the region. With the recent dry winters and continued build-up of fuel, new, large fires could occur.

- Deleted: ,
- Deleted: these
- Deleted: s
- Deleted: possibly
- Deleted: are occurring

According to Joe Schlobotnik, the program director for Canon City Trust, "the peaks are the signature of Canon City, and if all that was just on big empty place, this town's economy would really suffer." It is worrisome that Canon City Trust plays a large roll in what the future forests of Canon City will look like.

- Deleted: he is
- Deleted: the
- Deleted: and he said

Gertrude Hornswaggle, an employee of Canon City Trust, said that in the 100,000 acre area around the Wet Mountain Peaks, there are some areas where as many as 90% of the trees will be cut.

- Deleted: What
- Deleted: worry some
- Deleted: is
- Deleted: the
- Deleted: s
- Deleted: '
- Deleted: she is
- Deleted: the
- Deleted: and she
- Deleted: that
- Deleted: is